

After 8 years of Ken Livingstone 16 Tube Strikes... and more to come

London commuters face more disruption if Ken Livingstone and Labour's union backers have their way.

There have been 16 Tube strikes since Ken Livingstone became Mayor, two for every year. They'll strike again unless we fix things once and for all.

With just weeks to go to the election, Ken Livingstone and the Tube unions have done a cosy deal to avoid the political fallout. If Ken Livingstone is re-elected and has your vote in his back pocket, he and his union backers will sell out commuters yet again.

At £4, London's cash single Tube fare is three times the price of the European average (£1.37). The Oyster card fare is still 56% higher than the world average.

Imagine another 4 years of it.

Boris Johnson has a plan to deal once and for all with endless Tube strikes. He will be pro-active and negotiate a no-strike deal with the unions. In return, he will ensure there is independent binding arbitration to guarantee a fair deal for Tube workers.

Back Boris: A change for the better
